POETRY
AUTUMN NIGHTS.

Now when rain falls dimly gray
And the damp creeps on the floor,
When the misty street light wavers
Like a ghost beside my door;
The wind runs 'round the corner
Breathless on hurried feet,
And the leaves blow brown and draggled
Past my window down the street.

On this night without a star
Oh, I can but think of you,
And the fire that I keep piling
Is to warm your body through.

And my song to make you smile
While the busy kettle purrs,
And my hand that rests in your hand
So contentedly and sure.

So contentedly until
Burnt out fatigue snap and flare;
Then my drowsy eyes are wakened
And I look—you are not there!

Shadows, shadows by my hearth
In the corner, by the stair;
Moving shadows, deep and lonely,
In the hollow of your chair. . . .

What have I to do with them,
And the monotone of rain?
Why must tears be ever dripping
Down and down my window pane?
